I was hardly a person with a "to-do list" but doing a 9-5 job teaches you several things and one of the most important yet underrated skills that I have evolved is time management. On any typical day, there are numerous big and small tasks that demand our attention. For example: sending an important email, scheduling a call with a client, doing research work, and so on. However, a human mind can only remember such tasks to a certain limit. I have been a victim of poor time management and hence, resulted in slipping off significant chores of my day. While doing one of the trainings on my company portal, I came across some meaningful terms regarding time management which I was unmindful of until now. But while reading it, you will understand that you might have been doing it all along this time without realizing the category of your tasks. I hope you can relate to it.

- Deep Tasks - This type is usually done by a person alone and it requires your full attention. Additionally, these tasks should be blocked out when one works at their best and free of any distractions like email, meetings, calls, etc.
- Shallow Tasks - These ones completely opposite of Deep Tasks. The focus time and attention required in this category are far lesser than the first one but pile up throughout the day.
- Reactive Tasks - These tasks are relied on other people to be completed and it may get tricky to prioritize and manage as it requires communication via email or a phone call

STUDENT SUCCESS STORIES

From Jhargram to IFB Industries Ltd.: A Journey of Growth

Hello everyone, I am Alope Jana from Jaipuria Institute of Management, Noida. I am thrilled to share my excitement about being selected as a Management Trainee in Sales at IFB Industries Ltd.

Coming from a commerce background, I completed my graduation from Subarnarekha Mahavidyalaya and pursued an M.Com. from NSOU. My passion for sales and finance has always driven me to improve and excel in this field.

During my summer internship at ITC Ltd., I gained invaluable experience in inventory management, sales strategies, and market expansion. This exposure laid a strong foundation in sales and prepared me for real-world challenges.

The recruitment process at IFB Industries Ltd. was intense, but I stayed motivated. Clearing the group discussion and personal interview was a defining moment, where I confidently presented my journey and aspirations.

This achievement is the result of perseverance, self-belief, and continuous learning. I am deeply grateful to my family, mentors, and faculty for their unwavering support.

Excited for this new beginning at IFB Industries Ltd.!
